Letter from:

RIP RAPSON PRESIDENT & CEO, THE KRESGE FOUNDATION

Welcome back to Art X Detroit, our second biennial celebration of the creativity and imagination of the Kresge Eminent Artists and Artist Fellows. For five days, 38 Detroit-area artists — the 2011 and 2012 awardees — will fill Midtown with free music and dance, visual arts exhibitions, literary readings, and much more.

So much of the richness of Detroit's arts and cultural environment is inspired by or reflective of the region's present challenges, both the seen and unseen. In equal parts, however, that richness is tied to a desire to inspire hope and generate new ideas for change. Art cultivates engagement and dialogue that can strengthen neighborhoods. It is a lens through which we see ourselves now and in the future.

At the heart of all this stands the artist. Individual artists are essential to re-imagining Detroit. Through the Kresge Eminent Artist and Artist Fellowship programs, which are administered by the College for Creative Studies, we have awarded $2 million to more than 70 artists living and working in Metro Detroit since 2008. Through Art X Detroit, local, national and international audiences can experience the work of these creative talents in the city that serves as their incubator.

None of this would be possible without the tireless commitment, energy, and collaboration of Midtown Detroit, Inc., the College for Creative Studies, ArtServe Michigan, MOCAD, and the venues that are hosting events. We are in their debt. And we are honored to have the participation of the 2011 and 2012 Kresge Eminent Artists, Bill Harris and Naomi Long Madgett respectively, and the visual, literary and performing artist fellows whose works we are proud to present at Art X Detroit.

Enjoy!

ART X DETROIT

Art X Detroit: Kresge Arts Experience is a five-day multidisciplinary celebration that presents works created by the 2011–2012 Kresge Eminent Artists and Artist Fellows, from April 10–14, 2013, and features a special visual arts exhibition that runs through April 28, 2013 at MOCAD. Hosted at more than a dozen venues located throughout Midtown Detroit, Art X Detroit offers an exciting program of dance, musical and theatrical performances, literary readings, workshops, in-depth panel discussions, and more. And it is free to the public.

Art X Detroit is produced by Midtown Detroit, Inc. and presented by The Kresge Foundation.

KRESGE ARTS IN DETROIT

Kresge Arts in Detroit, funded by The Kresge Foundation and administered by the College for Creative Studies, represents one facet of The Kresge Foundation's effort to strengthen the long-term economic, social and cultural fabric of Detroit. Kresge Arts in Detroit is designed to elevate the profile and strengthen the careers of artists living and working in metropolitan Detroit and to enrich the quality of life for Detroiters by helping artists provide a broad spectrum of cultural experiences.

KRESGE ARTIST FELLOWSHIPS

Kresge Arts in Detroit provides significant financial support for Kresge Artist Fellowships annually, each consisting of a $25,000 award, public recognition and customized professional practice opportunities for emerging and established metropolitan Detroit artists. Every two years, 36 fellowships are awarded. Between 2013 and 2014, nine fellowships will be awarded in each of the following categories: dance/music, film/theater, literary arts and visual arts. Customized professional practice opportunities are offered by ArtServe Michigan.

KRESGE EMINENT ARTIST AWARD

Kresge Arts in Detroit provides significant financial support for one Kresge Eminent Artist Award of $50,000 annually to an exceptional artist who has made a longstanding contribution to metropolitan Detroit in the literary, performing or visual arts.

ART X DETROIT PARTNERS

THE KRESGE FOUNDATION

SUGAR HILL ARTS DISTRICT

The Sugar Hill Arts District is a new, emerging cultural center that celebrates art, the making of art and the experience of art. By rebuilding this historic district, Midtown Detroit, Inc. and its partners are paying tribute to a past golden era in Detroit—a time known for its energetic celebration of the arts and music. At the same time, we are trying to resurrect the spirit of this past era and bring a new level of vibrancy and activity within a contemporary context that will create a more viable social and cultural hub. This emerging arts district is already well represented by the visual arts with the presence of MOCAD and the N’Namdi Center for Contemporary Art. Sugar Hill has now attracted a number of new businesses including Seva, an award-winning vegetarian restaurant and wine bar, and 71 Garfield Building now houses the Detroit offices for Quinn Evans Architects and Trent Design; Socra Tea; Sugar Hill Clay, a community ceramic studio; and provides space for artist studios and pop-up galleries. Coming soon, with support from the New Economy Initiative and ArtPlace, will be a music and arts center in a now vacant historic church. New housing and arts-related retail developments are also planned throughout the district on a number of vacant parcels.

We are pleased that MOCAD is the hub for Art X Detroit and that our Opening Night will be the first taste for many to experience this emerging arts district, with performances at MOCAD, the N’Namdi Center for Contemporary Art and First Congregational Church, all in the same evening.

Creative Placemaking
 The success of 21st century cities is deeply rooted in quality of place. Placemaking is not a new concept, but "Creative Placemaking" is a relatively young field that is quickly gaining enough traction to offer a great deal of promise for cities. This fresh approach couples arts and culture with ambition for place and its early successes have created a field eager to experiment. In accordance with this spirit, placemakers across the nation have begun to develop new tools to address the complicated challenges facing cities. Through the lenses of an artist, community organizer, curator, national funder, and economic development agency, this panel will explore what can be learned from strong national examples of creative placemaking, how this work can offer benefits to all stakeholders, what tools are needed to move the field forward, and the issues we should be aware of as more and more individuals, organizations and communities begin to engage in creative placemaking. Moderator: Helen Davis Johnson, The Kresge Foundation. Panelists: Jason Schupbach, The National Endowment for the Arts; Jun-Li Wang, Springboard for the Arts; Rick Lowe, Project Row Houses; Juan William Chavez, St. Louis-based artist and cultural activist.

AXD Panel Discussion
The Challenges and Opportunities of Arts Coverage in the Age of Media Convergence
The new media environment is dramatically changing the way the arts get covered. Media industry consolidation is putting pressure on traditional news outlets to develop alternate business models and modes of delivery, often resulting in staff cuts in order to compete. Digital technology merges text, sound, and image into a single dynamic experience that can be accessed from a variety of devices. At the same time, interactive communications and social media have blurred the lines between producers and consumers of arts coverage. Arts journalists and critics are being forced to adopt new ways of working and to even question their relevance. This panel brings together arts journalists and critics from across the spectrum to examine the current media ecosystem and the market demands behind the shift from traditional arts coverage to blogging, aggregated news, and other models. Ultimately, the issues to be decided are why arts coverage matters and how to make local arts coverage more sustainable. Moderator: Vince Carducci, The College for Creative Studies

A Conversation on Higher Education in the Arts
This discussion explores the relationship that art education should aspire to have in the context of what happens after graduation. What are universities preparing students for? What systems are extant for graduated students to interact within the art world, and how does each cohort of new graduates find an entrée into the uncharted realm of collectors, curators, dealers, critics and institutions? What relationship is there between teaching art production and what follows: the exposition and/or commodification of art?

BILL HARRIS and Reverend Robert Jones
Have Mercy

BILL HARRIS and Aku Kadogo
Excerpt from Booker T. & Them: A Blues

Harris' intention is two fold; first, to collaborate with two of Detroit's finest artists, Reverend Robert Jones (a master blues historian and guitarist) and Aku Kadogo (an innovative stage director). Harris also wants to explore two possibilities of the theatrical experience: simple and complex.

Have Mercy is a demonstration of theater at its most basic, in the tradition of Homer and African djelis, or griots. In it, Harris reads a one-act monologue accompanied by Reverend Jones. It is a tale of an old blues musician recalling a transitional moment when he was faced with a life threatening temptation.

Excerpt from Booker T. & Them: A Blues is an example of theater transferred from the page to the stage, taking advantage of the technical possibilities of the craft. Aku Kadogo is directing an excerpt taken from Booker T. & Them, A Blues, Harris' book on the era of Booker T. Washington. Based on the myth of John Henry, that steel driving man, the passage presents an imagined life threatening confrontation between Booker T. and his arch nemesis, Jim Crow.

NAOMI LONG MADGETT
Naomi Long Madgett, Poet and Publisher

With a career as a published poet that spans eight decades, Dr. Naomi Long Madgett has amassed numerous accolades for her exemplary life of service and creative expression. This display presents samples of her published writings; books by the twenty winners of the annual Naomi Long Madgett Poetry Award (sponsored by Lotus Press, Inc.) which she founded in 1972; a collection of news articles and photos of Madgett throughout her life; and a life-size bronze bust of Madgett by sculptor Artis Lane, which is now a part of the permanent collection of the Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History.

In addition to the display covering the life and career of Madgett, a three minute video on her selection as the 2012 Kresge Eminent Artist Award (produced by Stephen McGee) and a thirty minute video, A Poet's Voice, based on her award-winning book, Octavia and Other Poems (produced and directed by Kathryn Vander Films) will be in rotation for viewing at the Detroit Public Library.

Selected Winners of the Naomi Long Madgett Poetry Award

The annual Naomi Long Madgett Poetry Award, established by Lotus Press, Inc. in 1993, has helped shine a spotlight on African American writers. This award has recognized twenty poets to date and attracts the attention of major publishing houses. This evening's program of readings and dialogue focuses on the careers of five awardees: Bill Harris, Claude Wilkinson, Nagueyalti Warren, Edward Bruce Bynum, and Esperanza Cintrón.

ART X DETROIT 2013 EXHIBITION

From April 10–28, 2013, MOCAD hosts all twelve Kresge Visual Arts Fellows and one Kresge Literary Arts Fellow in an exhibition of their most recent works. This exhibition presents these artists as they arrive at the culmination of their fellowship period, and shows their continuing explorations in the fields of painting, sculpture, photography, ceramics, and mixed-media installations. For some, the time as a Fellow has allowed for the creation of new works specifically for exhibition during Art X Detroit 2013. It has also given some Fellows an opportunity to collaborate with other artists, or to explore an altogether new medium for expression. The Art X Detroit 2013 exhibition at MOCAD brings forth the latest developments in the ongoing artistic careers of the Kresge Arts Fellows.

1 | 30*CORRIE BALDAUFFrames for the People: A City of Halos

Like color, optimism has a weight. Those willing to carry it stay on their path. Frames for the People: A City of Halos is an exploration in seeing Detroit through the eyes of its people. Working with large sheets of colored acrylic she calls Optimism Filters, Baldauf will create a short film with Stephen and Cory McGee, along with the people in Metropolitan Detroit.

During Art X Detroit 2013, Baldauf will initiate public performances in Midtown Detroit using the Optimism Filters. Viewers are encouraged to bring a camera to interact with the colorful acrylic sheets through photography, and then upload the images to Tumblr for sharing.

In addition to seeing Baldauf's installation work at MOCAD, visit the DFT at the Detroit Institute of Art on April 12th for the screening of Frames for the People: A City of Halos. The evening will include a conversation featuring Baldauf and filmmakers Stephen and Cory McGee.

1 | 47*LIZ COHENTEX MEX

A three-channel HD video installation at MOCAD, TEX MEX documents the test drive of the Trabantimino in the south Texas desert on a road leading to the Mexican border. This installation is part of an eight-year project called BODYWORK in which Cohen apprenticed with automotive technicians to create the Trabantimino, a car that transforms from East German Trabant to American El Camino through the hydraulic technology commonly found in lowriders. Further exploring transformation, Cohen simultaneously converted her body into one worthy of a car-show bikini model, ultimately making BODYWORK a celebration of subcultures, the freak member and the freak car.

OLAYAMI DABLS
Unidentified Standing Object

Unidentified Standing Object is a continuation of a 13-year old installation project Dabls began in 1999, titled “Iron Teaching Rocks how to Rust”. His ongoing work deals with the difference between African and European cultures and how they suffer from ignorance of one another. A visual discussion on hair, clothing and “art,” this new installation is an inquiry into a culture’s ability to transcend the suffering imposed by recent history and to reclaim its own standard of beauty.

DESIGN 99
Corner Store

Corner Store is a video installation inspired by neighborhood interactions during a curious rehab of the Design 99 studio-storefront space in Detroit. The video portrays the daily events, questions and meditations of neighbors and passersby as they stop for a peek through the glass or enter for a closer look. Boarded up for decades, the newly revealed storefront space and its mysterious interior give insight into the intersection of memories of a former Mom and Pop Polish Deli and a present day Mom and Pop art studio.

JOHN DUNIVANT
The Expatriate Parade

The Expatriate Parade began as a single sketch of a scapegoat with a ferris wheel on its back. This sketch led to many more, and the resulting parade of drawings — with its ceaseless forward motion in spite of the ever changing circumstances of the moment — led Dunivant to reflect on his own life. In the face of disintegrating relationships and a riot of personal challenges, we continue on, each in our own exile from where we imagined we would be. This piece is a celebration of that exile.

BRUCE GIFFIN
The Face of Detroit II

Bruce Giffin has photographed Detroit for over 30 years and is known for his portraits of the people he has encountered on the streets, particularly the homeless. In The Face of Detroit II, a new body of work, Giffin pulls the camera back to capture not just the faces of individuals, but their surrounding environments, continuing to create a larger portrait of Detroit.

LAITH KARMO
Cultivating Civility

The success of a culture can be measured by what it produces. Cultivating Civility is a body of work that explores the expansion and acceleration of cultures through the lens of ceramic objects. Archaeologists continue to unearth bowls, baskets, vases, bottles and other artifacts from early civilizations, all over the world. These preserved bits of information help us to build an understanding of not only the utility of the items but the spirituality of the people who made them. Cultivating Civility is Karmo's way of processing the history of clay in three-dimensions.

RICHARD LEWIS
Portraits

Richard Lewis' paintings are about representation of humanity, mainly of black people, in opposition to the representation he sees in the media. These new paintings are of Lewis' family and friends. The family portraits are traditional and straightforward. In contrast, the friends he is portraying are themselves painters, and Lewis shows them in the guise of jazz musicians that are personal heroes of his. Lewis is making an artistic connection between improvisation in jazz and improvisation in painting, and the personal and political stances each artform takes.

HUBERT MASSEY
The People's Vision

Hubert Massey works in a variety of media to create large public art installations and is noted for collaborating with communities to create art that tell their stories. For Art X Detroit 2013, Massey is creating a 30'x60' mural to be installed on the WSU Press Building at the corner of Woodward and Warren avenues. The mural's imagery is based on discussions that took place during community forums held by Massey as part of his artistic process, so that he may incorporate the vision of the people of Detroit into this new work. At MOCAD, Massey's preliminary drawings of the mural are on view throughout the month of April.

HEATHER MCGILL

Oblique Angle

McGill learned to paint as an apprentice in a collision shop in Detroit; these skills have evolved into a series of sculpture that applies the media of industry to the mantras of modernity. This particular series of work derives its shape from the schemata of a toy model of an American space station with a 1:72 scale ratio. Each sculptural element in Oblique Angle represents a different view of the model as the object rotates in space. Interference paints, which create color-shifting illusions triggered by movement and light, are activated by the “oblique angle” of viewer to object, suggesting a shifting of our perceptual reality.

MARK NEWPORT

Batman, Iron Man, Spiderman and the Rawhide Kid

Newport’s hand knit acrylic re-creations of superhero costumes combine their heroic, protective, ultra masculine, yet vulnerable personas with the protective gestures of the artist’s mother — hand knit acrylic sweaters meant to keep him safe from New England winters. In these works, Newport wants to raise the relationship between childhood play and adulthood, between toy and figurative sculpture, and between how our ideals about the body clash with the real, the possible, and the ever changing nature of living in a body.

CHERYL A. ALSTON

The Power of the Activist Artist

In the early twentieth century, African American artists of the anti-lynching movement created social realist art to change the perception of lynching and influence a society to stop perpetuating these horrific, brutal acts. Alston has found works of art that have humanized the victim into a more sympathetic figure, and compares those images to the actual documented photographs of lynchings. Stemming from a manuscript in progress, Alston is presenting the results of her research using the techniques of spoken word and performance art.

MARY JO FIRTH GILLETT

No Borders

How do zombies prepare us for the worst, what connection exists between the sexual life of a land snail and our own, what does a feral angel lament? Mary Jo Firth Gillett’s poems blur the boundaries between art and science, expectation and discovery, male and female, to uncover the likenesses and connections that exist in the seemingly disparate. (Gillett’s program will include a poetry reading by Kresge Literary Arts Fellow Ken Meisel.)

LOLITA HERNANDEZ

Butterflies, Roti, Tornadoes Oh My

Butterflies, Roti, Tornadoes Oh My is a performative piece developed from the initial chapter of Lolita Hernandez's novel-in-progress, Felipe and dhal in Search of the Garden of Love. The story travels diverse paths through the Caribbean/Detroit diaspora using vivid renditions of hope, love and loss. In this excerpt, the acceptance of change characterizes the piece, with arrivals and departures that cumulatively describe the characters' lives and possibilities. Pat Oleszko, a notable mixed-media and performance artist, is creating the visual and performative content of the piece as exemplified by a group of highly costumed characters and props including the three main characters, a flock of butterflies, a hummingbird and a tornado.

MICHAEL HURTT

Angels Watching Over Me: A Detroit Gospel Showcase

Writer, musician and music historian Michael Hurtt presents a celebration of the Motor City's Sacred Sounds featuring the Trumpelettes, The Pure Heart Travelers and the Silver Harpes. While Detroit has produced some of the most iconic and influential music of the twentieth century, the depth, breadth and influence of its potent gospel music heritage — entirely responsible for laying the groundwork for the city's R&B, soul and funk scenes — has often been overlooked. The golden age of Detroit gospel — roughly the years spanning 1950 to 1980 — witnessed a singular explosion of talent that, combined with a strong local recording scene and the rise of the independent record label, preserved many of these groups on wax forever, where they continue to thrill all of those who discover them. In addition, many are still performing today. The Trumpelettes, the Pure Heart Travelers and the Silver Harpes are three of the most intense, individualistic and longest-running in the city and have long captured the unique essence of Detroit Gospel.

STEPHEN MACK JONES

Cadillac Kiss - A Comedy

Cadillac Kiss - A Comedy is the first of three new stage comedies in Stephen Mack Jones' Symphony in The D, Major trilogy exploring Detroit music and its very personal and surprising impact on a successful upper-middle class, suburban Detroit African-American family. Jones' new work explores what it means to be black and possess magnificent dreams that fall well outside of societal expectations, cultural norms and family hopes. It speaks to the deep and abiding value of compassion, tolerance, as well as the calming effects of a good strawberry crepe. Cadillac Kiss is a rare combination of the highly comedic and sincerely moving, written by a playwright known for his honest, often irreverent dialogue and fully realized characters.

Automotive Wedding, Packard Junkyard, Piquette Avenue

Ken Meisel fills a ground-floor display window at the historic Garfield Lofts building with a video projection piece that celebrates the interactivity of photography and poetry. The photographic collage, created with the help of Visual Arts Fellow Bruce Giffin, evokes the intimacy of the Rust Belt and Motor City love. The lyrical poem, placed across the photograph, both contextualizes and adds language and meaning to the piece. Joined together as a video installation, the photo collage and poetry become a new art work about love, Detroit style. During Art X Detroit 2013, Meisel also collaborates with Performing Arts Fellows Passalacqua on John Lee Hooker's Boogie Chillun, a performance of Meisel's poem by the same name and Never Alone, a behind-the-scenes video short.

MARSHA MUSIC

Marsha Music - Live From Hastings Street! A One Woman Show

Music presents a one-woman-show based on her blog essay on the life and times of her father, Joe Von Battle, who opened his pre-Motown record shop in the mid-1940s on Hastings Street. Joe's Record Shop was a seminal birthplace of Detroit musical history. Battle recorded the legendary sermons of the Rev. C. L. Franklin and was the first to record the singular voice of Rev. Franklin's daughter, Aretha. He recorded many other iconic artists such as John Lee Hooker, Little Willie John, Sonny Boy Williamson, and Johnny Basset. Music's performance includes a multi-media presentation of video, still photos and music, as well as narration about growing up in the musical world of her father's record shop.
